Particulate Matter (Things, Thingys, Thingies) by Stephanie Syjuco

Syjuco's handmade versions of objects designed by users of the free 3-D modeling program Google SketchUp exist somewhere between the bootleg, the copy, and the translation. Modeled from online designs that seem to lack value or utility, Syjuco's refashioned versions explore the handmade in the digital-era of design, uniqueness found even within the copy, and collaboration's relationship to outsourcing, as well as labor, authorship, and value.

The Plastic Arts by Dexter Sinister

Diffusing the lines between form and content in graphic design, Dexter Sinister creates presentations and publications that collapse the distinctions between editing, design, production and distribution. Designed as a walk-in-caption and typeset in their newly devised Meta-the-difference-between-the-two-Font. font, this exhibition offers a series of frames with which to consider the usual channels of material, subject matter and set-up in exhibition displays.
